India Kager - Mother and Navy veteran Gina Best, the mother of India Kager, who was killed by Virginia Beach police, filed a petition with the Justice Department on Thursday to investigate her daughter's murder. She was accompanied by Black Lives Matter activists and demanded an independent parallel investigation. Six months after her daughter was killed, she still hasn't received report from the Virginia Attorney General's Office. Virginia. died with Angelo Perry, the father of her child, on September 5, 2015, when Virginia Beach police fired 30 shots at her car and used grenades. Her four-month-old son was buckled in his car seat behind them but was uninjured. Police confiscated video footage of the incident in a 7-11 car park in Linnhaven Parkway and Salem Road, where the shooting took place. The Virginia Attorney General's Office has not yet responded to the Best family's request to release details of the police report, autopsy, the names of the officers involved or video of the 7-11 incident. Virginia Beach police have also yet to return India's personal belongings or her car to Best. Gina Best is looking for the facts of the case so that she and her family can come to terms with the death of their daughter and begin to move towards closure. Video: Gina Best pleads with Kevin Lewis, a department spokeswoman, to launch a parallel VBPD investigation because they have not released any information to her about her daughter's death. Kager was a Navy veteran who was honorably fired after serving four years in 2013. She has earned a good medal of conduct and other awards. Both her father and grandfather are retired Washington, D.C. police officers. She was never in trouble with the law or even breaking the traffic rules, according to Best. When Best visited the Department of Justice, Kevin Lewis, a spokesman for the department, met her at the front door, where she begged him to help her. Her voice faltered with emotion several times as she spoke. Best told Lewis that her daughter had never been in trouble and had not been tracked down by police. She said her daughter was a sensitive, caring mother who played five musical instruments and was a graduate of Duke Ellington School of Art, requiring auditions to attend. And she would be alive today if the SWAT team gave her a chance to follow their orders, she added. If they had given her a chance to survive, she would have complied, and they didn't, Best said. My screams went unheard of,' she told Lewis. They have to stop killing us. Lewis offered his condolences to Best, promising that he would deliver her motion to the attorney general. Gina Best (center) and supporters pleading with Justice Department spokeswoman Kevin Lewis/Photo John Sangas of India Kager's story was largely overshadowed by the dark blue line of prominent police killings of many unarmed blacks preceding it. It would not have been exposed if Best had not been persistently supported by mothers who had also lost children as a result of police brutality. Carla Martin, who co-founded Truth Seekers for India Kager, believes that comprehensive changes in law enforcement are needed. The Department of Justice does not have a single law enforcement process across the country, she said. As a result, when innocent bystanders are killed in law enforcement actions, investigators can hide the facts in bureaucratic Martin also believes that Angelo Perry did not get the due process because of the way the police executed the stop. India Kager and her companion Angelo Perry were killed within 15 seconds, and that's according to Virginia Beach Police Chief Jim Seavera, she said. Cevera held a press conference on December 8 last year, outlining crimes in which Perry was a person of interest. He said the weapons confiscated after the shooting were used in other crimes, but did not link Perry to the fact that he had committed those crimes. North acknowledged that Kager's murder was accidental. Jerold Sanders, president of Justice ATUS Inc., said the Kager case is part of a systemic problem that requires a systemic solution. It has shaped The Justice ONUS to confront the serious problems of the community head, using the resources already available in these communities. She advocates the passage of new legislation called the Uniform Reporting Act (URLEIA), which she said would require systemic changes in law enforcement. Worldwide, changes in law enforcement practices are needed now to stop the police from killing innocent people such as India Kager and many others. Supporters are demanding justice for India Kager at the Department of Justice/Photo John zangas There is still no congressional support for the act because of overwhelming resistance from FOPs and police unions. We have legislative leaders who put their own interests before the interests of the communities, while children are shot in the streets, Sanders said. Sanders said the law has received many endorsements, including blacks in government and concerned black men in America. Getting it sponsored in Congress would require a major grassroots effort, she said. For Gina Best and many others struggling to cope with the loss of loved ones, a shift in law enforcement can no longer wait. The Wikipedia article is a list of people killed by non-military law enforcement officers in the United States in September 2015, whether in the line of duty or not, and regardless of the cause or method. The list documents the occurrence of death without making any impact on the offences or excuses on the part of the deceased or the officer involved. The killings are being carried out on the date of the incident that killed people. Different dates of death, if known, are marked in the description. The table below lists 29 people. (This number should be updated automatically if changes are saved.) It's a dynamic list and may never be able to meet specific fullness standards.
